CAN YOU SPOT AN IMPOSTER?

Frauds using false identities are on the rise. Can you spot an imposter? Eighty-five percent of adults are confident they can, according to a recent AARP survey. But the majority of the survey participants then flunked an “Imposter IQ” quiz that measures the ability to spot a liar. Welcome to what experts call the illusion of invulnerability—the belief that frauds happen to others but not you. Overconfidence in your ability to spot bad guys is a dangerous thing. Imposter fraud is among the fastest-growing scam types precisely because so many of us think we are immune to it.

To help, here is a small sampling of actual imposter scams now playing out across America.

The Jury Duty Manager: “Hi, I’m calling from the courthouse and you missed jury duty. Pay $400 or go to prison.”

The Puppy Breeder: “as a dog lover, you should know we just got a beautiful litter of purebred golden retriever puppies. Just $200 each!”

The Utility Company: “We will be shutting off your electricity in 24 hours if you don’t pay the past-due amount on your bill immediately.”

The Government Clerk: “You have unclaimed property with the state. Simply pay this fee and we will release it to you.”

The Ticket Seller: “As an affiliate of a major ticket vendor, we can get you seats for your dream concert for a discount, if you act quickly.”

The Bank Verifier: “There’s a data problem with your checking account. Please verify this information so we can confirm things and fix the error.”

The takeaway? NEVER accept a pitch or give any information to a stranger—on the phone, in person or over the internet— without first independently verifying that it is legitimate. Watch next month’s Newsletter for additional examples of scammers to watch for!
